Good question, and you're right to want a real answer.

The honest version is: you need both. Premium Support is the right long-term home for that 2 AM call — it's how Red Hat's set up to respond to platform-level incidents 24/7, and it's not something consulting can replicate well.

What our consulting team owns through day 45 is the operational playbook: what to monitor, what to alert on, who escalates to whom, and what the runbook looks like for the failure modes you're most likely to hit. Marcus and David will pair with whoever you designate as your platform owner so the runbook isn't just a document, it's muscle memory.

We can walk through the support tier picture on the kickoff call. Short version for Elena: 'Premium Support starts day one; consulting builds the operational practice on top.'
